Celebrating 25 Years

Our Own Homeschool Journey. We began homeschooling in 1990. We put up a bulletin board, displayed an American flag for the Pledge of Allegiance, and unpacked our big stack of textbooks. Homeschooling quickly came to feel like a heavy sack of rocks. However, homeschooling became a joy when we learned to relax, make homeschooling who we were as a family instead of a chore, and focus on the hearts, souls, and minds of our children.

We learned that one of the many blessings of homeschooling is that children can learn together some of the time and receive individual instruction at other times. We cherish memories of our family learning together. Sometimes that happened when we were reading aloud or while taking a daylong field trip or a weeklong vacation. Sometimes we learned together while putting on a play, making a craft, taking an art class, teaching a Bible class, or eating a meal from a region of America or the world.

The Notgrass Company. In time we began to write curriculum based on what we had learned. In 1999 we asked God to take care of us and started working full time in what we then called The Notgrass Company. Charlene appliquéd fabric books on our homeschool convention sign. Our son John sits behind it at one of our early homeschool conventions in the photo at right. In those early days, we printed our curriculum at a local copy shop and put it into three-ring binders, as seen below. We spent a great deal of time on the road, traveling around Tennessee performing a story and song history program and displaying our books. We also attended homeschool conventions.

In the photo above, Charlene and John work in our first headquarters in the basement of our house in Cookeville, Tennessee. Check out that up-to-date computer monitor. Charlene remembers the day when Ray told her he would like to write a year-long American history curriculum for high school. He said, “I don’t know if anyone would buy it, but I would like to write it.” Ray said that he wanted to combine history, literature, and primary sources as his own history and English teachers had done when he was in high school. He told her that he would also like to add Bible study. Charlene encouraged Ray to go for it, and he got to work.

The Notgrass History Approach to Writing Curriculum. As Ray began writing this new curriculum, we put a great deal of thought into our approach. Homeschool textbooks generally provide context and comprehensiveness, while unit studies generally provide depth and richness. Having used unit studies ourselves, we knew how hard it is to pull resources together from many sources. We decided to combine the textbook and unit study approaches to create curriculum that was both comprehensive and fascinating, while being easy to use for both students and parents. We would also combine history, English, and Bible, believing that students could learn better when their literature, writing, and Bible study coordinated with their history. Therefore, high school students could receive credit in all three subjects through this coordinated program.

In addition we would not send parents looking for primary sources. We would include them in our curriculum package. We would also provide optional review questions, quizzes, and tests for parents who wanted to use those. We would also sell the recommended literature to make gathering those books easy for parents, too. With all assignments in the main lesson book, there would be no need for separate teacher guides.

For the last 25 years, we have continued to fine-tune our approach and to use it for elementary, middle school, and high school curriculum. Most importantly, we have written each curriculum from a distinctly Christian worldview to teach the heart, soul, and mind of each student.

Exploring America. In 2002 Ray completed Exploring America. The last lesson in each unit was a Bible study. Ray chose recommended literature and gave students writing prompts. At first he chose a book of poetry, a book of speeches, and a book of primary sources which we sold in the curriculum package. At the end of each lesson, Ray told the students what literature title to be reading; what pages to read in the poetry, speeches, and primary source books; and gave them assignments in the companion review material, which included daily review questions, quizzes, exams, and an answer key. Eventually we collected all of the needed primary source documents and published them in the Exploring America companion book, American Voices.

A New Office. In early 2003, we moved to Jackson County, Tennessee, into a big drafty farmhouse built around 1845. The entire company fit into its small mother-in-law apartment with room to spare. Ray is standing in that apartment in the photo at left.

Exploring World History. Ray didn't expect to write another high school history course, but parents began asking when we were going to publish a world history. In 2004 we published Exploring World History. At the time, we printed all our books on our office printer, punched holes on one edge with a hand powered puncher, and bound them with plastic coils, sometimes while watching old movies, as Ray and Mary Evelyn are doing in the photo at right.

Exploring Government. In 2006 we published Ray's Exploring Government curriculum, which is a one-semester course. By then, we were able to sell enough books to have them printed in paperback.

Exploring Economics. In 2009, when we had been in business full time for ten years, we published Exploring Economics, another one-semester course. It was our first curriculum that was never in a coil bound version.

Middle School Curriculum. During those early years, parents would ask us if they could use our high school curriculum with younger children. The next part of our story may seem obvious, but it took us years to realize that we should write an American history curriculum for middle school students.

You see, we didn't have some great business plan we were following. Looking back, we believe that God had His own plan for us.

America the Beautiful. As John and Charlene were returning home from a homeschool convention in Virginia, they discussed how we might write a one-year American history for middle schoolers (or students in grades 5, 6, 7, or 8). As with our high school histories, it would be a one-year course with 30 units of five lessons each. John came up with the idea of a different type of lesson for each of the lessons in a unit. By the end of the trip, they had decided to include five types of lessons. The Our American Story lessons would tell about the main events of a time period. The other lessons would continue to tell the history of that time period with a focus on specific topics. An American Biography would look at a person. Another lesson would be about Daily Life. One lesson would explore An American Landmark, such as the Statue of Liberty. The fifth lesson would focus on one of God's Wonders, such as the Grand Canyon. We decided that the title America the Beautiful would illustrate America and its history perfectly. We published it in 2010. For the first time, some of the pages were in color. Soon we were having the textbooks and the We the People primary source book printed in hardback, a practice we soon implemented for all of our curriculum.

As we had done with the high school history books, we chose literature to go along with the course. This is a wonderful way to learn history. For example, when the students are learning about the Great Depression in Unit 21, they are reading Blue Willow, which tells about a young girl growing up in the Depression. We also included a map book for students to color and a timeline that students would complete themselves. We included creative writing ideas, vocabulary assignments, and family activities, such as the one pictured at right. We also published a Student Workbook and a Lesson Review so that parents could choose which would be most appropriate for their child's interests and learning style.

As our children married and began families of their own, Ray and Charlene began being the Notgrass History representatives at most of the homeschool conferences we attended, but often shared the responsibilities with their children, their children's spouses, and sometimes with grandchildren, too. And as the company grew we began to need team members other than family members. We hired our first non-family team member in 2012.

From Adam to Us. In 2016 we published From Adam to Us, our world history for middle school—three down and one to go. Our next middle school curriculum is to be a world geography. The pictures at the top of page 8 show some of the process of writing and publishing one of our courses—in this case, From Adam to Us: writing, proofreading, approving proofs from the printer, and receiving the first copies.

In 2017 we published the first audio supplements to our curriculum, which we enjoyed recording at a studio on Music Row in Nashville, seen below. Charlene recorded From Adam to Us and Ray recorded Exploring America. To lower recording fees, they spent 12-hour days at the studio, taking turns reading for an hour at a time. The process taught us a great deal, so that now we plan to record in-house to add more audio supplements to our offerings. It is a long process.

Scope and Sequence. As we added new curriculum, we thought a great deal about our scope and sequence for a student using Notgrass History for all 12 years. We made plans eventually to publish an American history, a world history, a world geography, and a civics/government/economics type of course for elementary, middle school, and high school, believing that students would benefit from covering those broad topics three times during their homeschooling.

We decided to emphasize key concepts at each level so that a subsequent course would serve as both a review and a source of more in-depth information about those concepts. In each course we would also add additional people and events that were unique to that level, always keeping in mind the maturity level of the student. We would also cover additional world and American history topics in the geography and civics/government/economics courses.

Our Star-Spangled Story. In 2018 we published our first history curriculum for elementary students. Charlene and daughters, Bethany and Mary Evelyn, homeschooling mothers themselves, collaborated on an American history entitled Our Star-Spangled Story. The curriculum is a chronological study of American history with lessons chosen specifically for younger students. It has 30 units with three lessons each. Like our middle school curriculum, each unit has a suggested family activity and, like all of our curriculum, we suggest literature to go along with the lessons.

For the first time, we published a full-color hardback timeline. We chose songs, poetry, and folk dances as the primary sources and published them in a book entitled Star-Spangled Rhythms and Rhymes. Homeschool students, graduates, and parents recorded the songs and poems. We made videos to teach students how to do the folk dances. All of these are available online. The curriculum set also includes a Student Workbook.

Exploring World Geography. In 2020 we published Ray's Exploring World Geography, which completes our offerings for high school. The curriculum includes a full-color gazetteer featuring maps and details about the countries of the world plus primary source documents. Daily lessons guide students on a journey across our planet, focusing on how people interact with the physical world around them. Like our other high school courses, weekly project ideas include a choice of writing assignments and other creative activities. The curriculum focuses on developing a Christian worldview and, like all of our courses, we recommend specific literature titles.

Our 50 States. Also in 2020, we published Our 50 States for elementary students, written and developed by Mary Evelyn. The one-year course has 104 lessons divided into 26 units of four lessons each. It has two lessons on each state, two lessons about Washington, D.C., and two about U.S. overseas territories. The course includes the hardback textbook with lessons to read, with song lyrics to a song for each state, and instructions for family activities. Students complete an Atlas Workbook. The curriculum also has a Lesson Review.

In 2022 Notgrass History moved away from Ray and Charlene's home into our first off-site headquarters. Some of our team members work in the office and warehouse, while others work remotely. Without our amazing team, our company could not ship orders, answer customer questions, make videos, design graphics, attend conferences, and continue developing curriculum!

Mary Evelyn is now writing and developing an elementary world geography, entitled Our Great Big World, which has a similar format to Our 50 States. Charlene is now working on a world history for elementary students.

We are happy to be celebrating our 25th Notgrass History anniversary. Thank you for being part of this exciting journey!

Our Great Big World

Introduce your children to a reindeer herding family in Finland, a farmer in Honduras, and a hymn writer in China. Take them to a floating village in Cambodia, a Maya ruin in Belize, and the tallest building in the world in Dubai. Show them the polar bears around Hudson Bay, the falcons in Qatar, and the monarch butterflies in Mexico. Experience all this and so much more from your own couch as you explore Our Great Big World together! This new one-year course for grades 1-4 is in the development phase and we are excited to release it as soon as it is ready. Stay tuned for more updates!

Notgrass History for High School

Notgrass History offers Bible-based and easy-to-use high school curriculum for homeschool students in 9th grade, 10th grade, 11th grade, and 12th grade. Author

Ray Notgrass is a veteran homeschooling father who holds a bachelor's degree in history and master's degrees in history and New Testament.

Our curriculum is academically rigorous. Daily lessons introduce students to key concepts while primary source documents and literature add richness. Notgrass History helps students complete their high school requirements while also preparing them for whatever comes after high school. It is also flexible for students with different learning styles. Students can choose from a variety of suggested unit project ideas, including writing an essay, conducting an interview, creating art, building a model, or making a video.

All of our high school courses offer students the opportunity to earn credit in English by reading assigned literature and completing composition assignments. Our world history, U.S. history, and world geography courses also offer the opportunity to earn elective Bible credit.

What Students Are Saying

"It strengthened my faith in ways unexplainable and the history inspired me."

— Sarah J., Idaho

"I can say with certainty that this has been the first time I have ever enjoyed learning about history."

— Emma G., Indiana

"[Exploring Government] is about shaping students into citizens of character and integrity to help form the next generation of Americans."

— Bryan K., Tennessee
